ECONOMIC BENEFITS TO ENGAGING AN INDIGENOUS WORKFORCE IN SASKATCHEWAN

THURSDAY, MAY 31 - 9:15 a.m. – 10:30 a.m.

Session Description

For too long, the Saskatchewan economy has been defined as two solitudes: an active and diverse mainstream economy rooted in agriculture and natural resource development and a marginalized and limited Indigenous economy. The world has changed dramatically. Through such processes as the Treaty Land Entitlement, impact and benefit agreements, and the rapid transition to Indigenous self-government, First Nations and Metis people are assuming a more prominent role in the provincial and national economies. Over 130 First Nations support oil and gas development on their reserves. Indigenous proponents are backing proposed pipelines and railways in western Canada. Equity investments have emerged as a key element in the resource sector. With a steadily increasing number of Indigenous people entering the skilled worker force, it is becoming increasingly clear that the long-standing image of Indigenous marginalization no longer holds. This presentation reviews the state of Indigenous economic participation and provides an image of Saskatchewan c. 2050, when First Nations and Metis people are even more deeply integrated into the Saskatchewan economy. It presents strategies for personal and corporate engagement that can assist the processes of economic engagement.

About the Presenter

Ken Coates is the Canada Research Chair in Regional Innovation at the Johnson-Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy, University of Saskatchewan campus. Ken was raised in Whitehorse, Yukon, and has long-standing professional and personal interests in Aboriginal rights, northern development, northern Canadian history, science, technology and society, and Japan Studies.

He received his BA (History) from UBC, MA (History) from Manitoba and PhD (History) from UBC. Ken has had the distinct pleasure of working at universities across Canada and internationally, starting at Brandon University and continuing at the University of Victoria, and the University of Northern British Columbia (where he was the Founding Vice-President Academic). He spent two years at the University of Waikato in Hamilton, New Zealand, an institution known globally for its work on Indigenous education.

Ken has worked with Aboriginal peoples and organizations and with government agencies responsible for Indigenous affairs across Canada and in New Zealand and Australia. He assisted with Aboriginally-themed documentaries produced by Northern Native Broadcasting Yukon, assisted with land claims research and participated in a variety of national and international collaborations, including serving on the Research Advisory Committee of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples. He was the Director of the International Centre for Northern Governance and Development, which provided regionally-relevant research focused on northern Saskatchewan and delivered a community-based Masters program on Northern Governance and Development. He is the Director of the Macdonald-Laurier Institute's research project on Aboriginal Peoples and the Natural Resource economy.

His wife, Carin Holroyd, is an Associate Professor of Political Studies at the University of Saskatchewan. He has five children and six grandchildren. Ken also assists Carin with her charity, the Vietnam Education Society, which builds schools for communities in rural Vietnam.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

In 2008, the SCA and the Saskatchewan Apprenticeship and Trade Certification Commission (SATCC) jointly pursued the concept of an industry-led scholarship program to encourage graduating high school students to enter a career in the skilled trades. With SCA member contributions and administrative support provided by SATCC, forty $1,000 scholarships were awarded.

To date, the construction industry has raised well over $500,000 for the fund. Scholarships are awarded every June to selected, eligible high school graduates who have completed the SYA program. To receive scholarship funds, students must, within two years of graduation, complete the first level of apprenticeship or complete one year of post-secondary training in a designated skilled trade.

If we hit the target at the 2018 Summer Meeting, the SCA is on track to have donated $100,000 to the SYA Scholarship Fund!

Join Elk Ridge Resort's Executive Chef, Travis Pye, as he guides us through a range of beers paired with mini dishes in just 2 hours. Your ticket includes four beers, four mini dishes, live cooking demo, scorecards and recipes to take home.

Just like the food we taste, if we pay more attention to the beers we drink, we begin to understand which flavours we like and what styles we prefer. As we continue to explore, we really start to appreciate the complexity of flavour that can be found…
